Q: Should I use a.htaccess or.htpasswd to ensure a password is used? What will be the best way to ensure my users are using the correct password? They should not be able to access the account if they do not use the correct password. I want to have a password on a PHP page, and that if they do not use it, then they are taken to a random password screen. If they choose the correct one, then they get on with it. If they have wrong password then they are sent to the random password screen again. I am planning on doing this via PHP in a PHP file. Can I use.htaccess for this? or should I use.htpasswd instead? A: PHP with.htaccess is as easy as you can get. You can just add this to your.htaccess file: AuthType Basic AuthName "Login Area" AuthUserFile /path/to/passwordfile Require valid-user A: You can use a regular expression in a.htaccess file. Here is a rexample: AuthUserFile /my/path/to/passwords/file AuthName "Redirect to Password Page" AuthBasicProvider /my/path/to/passwords/file AuthBasicRegex "(.?)-[a-z]+" AuthType Basic AuthUserFile /my/path/to/passwords/file AuthGroupFile /my/path/to/passwords/file Require valid-user So, if you have a file in /my/path/to/passwords/file, then you can check for any alpha/numeric character or spaces (or whatever you want). The (.) is the regex for the password, and anything in parenthesis is optional. Q: Advice on best way to check array_key_exists() I'm working on a form creator that dynamically creates forms based on what the user selects in drop down boxes. The values in the drop downs are keys for arrays that the form uses to store data. In my event handler for the select box, I want to check if the selected value exists in the array. If it does exist, the form is passed to a function, and if it doesn't exist, I'd like to do something else

Rudolf Hoffmann Rudolf Hoffmann (1905–1990) was a German-American engineer and architect. He became noted for his work in building bridges and dams. He served as the chief designer of the John A. Roebling Suspension Bridge at the Brooklyn-Battery Tunnel in New York City, which was named in honor of his father, John A. Roebling. The facility opened to the public in 1931. It was eventually declared to be a National Monument of the United States. Biography Rudolf Hoffmann was born in Balingen, Germany on January 9, 1905. His father, John August Hoffmann, was an engineer and inventor. Hoffmann began his career at the age of 17, working at the company in Balingen that his father had founded. The firm's first product was a bridge for boats called the Schlepperbruchbau. Hoffmann soon moved to Berlin and attended the Technical University, where he studied under Friedrich Marchand and Hermann Boehm. By the end of the 1920s Hoffmann had been appointed to the design team for the Roebling Suspension Bridge across the Hudson River in New Jersey. By then he was producing about two bridges a year. Eventually Hoffmann had almost 50 patents. In 1929 Hoffmann and the Roeblings teamed up with Eliel Saarinen, John A. Roebling's nephew, to find and attract investors for his tower on the banks of the Tappan Zee in Tarrytown, New York. It was to be a skyscraper of more than. After weeks of unsuccessful negotiations, the building was sold to William J. Wilgus who operated a real estate business. Hoffmann sought permission from the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers to build his bridge. This was granted. At this point the project was named after Hoffmann. Shortly afterward he decided to move to the United States and became a U.S. citizen. Hoffmann spent the winter of 1930-31 in the United States, and established himself in New York City. He joined the American Society of Civil Engineers in 1932, which later named him an Honorary Member. He was building bridges and dams all over the world by the end of the 1930s. In 1940 he was hired to assist the State of New York with its dam development program. He was then hired by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers
