An extract obtained from bovine thymus has been found to have significant anti-tumour activity in immunosuppressed animals. This extract has been prepared and partially purified. The authors studied the biological activity of this partially purified factor in culture medium. Using the EAT-W test on mice, they found that it increased the inhibitory effect of natural killer cells on the growth of tumour cells and that it caused the activation of phagocytosis. Experiments were performed in vitro on mice thymus to determine whether thymic factor could activate T cells and increase their resistance to tumour cells. In cultures of mouse thymus, this factor induced the growth of spleen cells in vitro and increased their antibody response to SRBC. It also increased their ability to kill tumour cells in vitro. A series of experiments were performed to establish the levels of active factor in thymic extract and its mode of action. No effect was found in cultures of mouse thymus or spleen cells using crude bovine thymus extract. The factor was partially purified, and its molecular weight was studied.Pages 07 May, 2012 Months to go for The Flash Hey there!I guess the Dark Knight is done, and everyone is rushing off to the theater for the final installment. Here's the synopsis of it from imdb.com:"The Flash will have a crucial confrontation with the Rogues on his home turf, Central City. Based on the DC Comics character created by John Broome and Carmine Infantino, the Flash must be fast enough to outrun a speeding bullet. The Flash continues to have a key role in The Dark Knight Rises." The only thing I'm worried about is the fact that its in October, which means I will be busy in school. I don't really mind, I'm a film major, and that's what I'll be doing anyway. But I would like to see how the last movie ended. 0 shares About
