Slider Timer is one of the simplest countdown timers we've reviewed. It's still a very powerful timer, so it's definitely worth considering. As you can see from the name, Slider Timer is a simple countdown timer with a slider in the main interface. Basically, the timer is set to a certain value and you can use it to slide back or forth to a certain time. This is a good solution for beginners, as it's pretty straightforward. On the other hand, users with more experience may find it a bit clunky, as it requires a slider to move an actual count value. You can choose the value of the timer from 1-9999 and each slide is taken to be a second of a count. So, if you choose 1-minute count and 10 seconds per slide, you will end up with a 90-second timer. The slider is independent of the actual count value and you can move it back or forth freely to slide the count. When the timer expires, the slider immediately snaps back to zero. It's not possible to set a "pause" option like Minute Timer, as it simply keeps running without any further features. Overall
