U.S. District Judge Robert Lasnik in Seattle, Washington, in a ruling that he made public, said he did not agree with a U.S. Justice Department motion to block release of the roughly 6,500-page report, which was authored by two Republican House committees and details alleged misconduct and mismanagement by the bureau's Washington Field Office in its botched investigation of illegal gun trafficking and other crimes. The decision prompted immediate complaints from the National Rifle Association (NRA), the most powerful gun lobby in the United States, and gun rights groups. "The administration should respect the court's order and let the report be released," NRA spokesman Chris Cox said in a statement. The Washington Field Office, which oversees ATF's Phoenix, Arizona, office, has been the subject of intense congressional scrutiny after the botched operation, which resulted in the 2010 arrests of small arms dealers, failed to find evidence that former New York City Mayor Michael Bloomberg's group, Mayors Against Illegal Guns, was funding such dealers. The Republican-led congressional committees criticized the bureau in a 200-page report released last month. They also filed a lawsuit against the Department of Justice on behalf of the bureau and its director,
