Screenshots are automatically saved in a user-defined folder, without any impact on the overall stability of the system. Multi Screen Dump works flawlessly on all Windows versions and doesn't require more than average computer skills. It however lacks some very important features as compared to the other products in this particular software category, including hotkey configuration to allow users to set their very own keyboard shortcuts. There are some predefined hotkeys, all of them displayed when you launch the app. What's more, the floating window may become annoying after a specific period of the time, but due to the lack of customizable hotkeys, users have no other choice but to keep it always on top. Overall, Multi Screen Dump is a nice project, but it needs certain revisions in order to become much more user-friendly. In addition, it needs many more options for a greater customization power.
