Galactosylated C-type natriuretic peptide (GCNP) is a novel potent ligand for the guanylyl cyclase type C receptor (GC-C), and has some unique characteristics compared to other vasoactive peptides. To investigate whether GCNP has actions on other receptors, we examined the effects of GCNP on the interaction with adrenomedullin (AM) receptors expressed in Chinese hamster ovary cells. GCNP enhanced the stimulation of cyclic AMP (cAMP) formation induced by AM, and did not affect AM-induced cAMP formation at all. The enhancement effect of GCNP on AM stimulation of cAMP formation was inhibited by pertussis toxin. The des-galactosylated peptide did not show any enhancing action on AM receptors. Furthermore, GCNP also enhanced the stimulation of cAMP formation induced by G(q)-coupled receptors, endothelin B receptor (ET(B)-R) and endothelin-1 receptor type A (ET(A)-R). Furthermore, AM-induced guanosine 5'-O-(3-thiotriphosphate) binding and phosphoinositide hydrolysis were significantly increased by GCNP. These results suggest that GCNP is a GC-C receptor
