Helvetica, the most used font in the world, is heading to Comic Sans. According to the font's font wing, Helvetica Neue is going to be officially launched into the mainstream market with Comic Sans as a new member of the Helvetica family.

The font will be available at most major online storefronts such as iTunes, Microsoft and Google as well as Adobe's Typekit. Helvetica Neue designer Erik Spiekermann revealed the move in a blog post earlier this week. "Comic Sans was my first try at a redesign of this typeface back in the early 90s," Spiekermann said. "I quickly learned that using a cartoon-like font for text was a bad idea in the long run.

The fact is that people need different fonts for different things." Source: Erik Bisubstituted 1,3,2-oxazaphospholanes: a novel class of cytotoxic agents. A series of bis(aryl)-1,3,2-oxazaphospholidines and bis(heteroaryl)-1,3,2-oxazaphospholanes are described which contain structural elements found within the tetrahedral intermediate of the DNA-cleaving diaziridinone antitumour agents. These compounds show, in vitro, activity against human and murine tumour cell lines comparable to that of aziridinomitozirines. Twitter is becoming increasingly popular as a news source. We think this popularity is attributed to its quick update frequency and also convenience. "No news story is too slow for Twitter. Thanks to its characteristic one-to-many relationship, a single message provides updates of everything that is happening, both locally and globally, to any of a variety of different news sources." The Daily Telegraph Newspaper lists the top 10 news stories tweeted. As you can see from the title e79caf774b

A similar implementation was suggested by the excellent Drupal documentation - Drupal - How to use Drupal user authentication with MediaWiki, so we're not trying to build our own authentication system from scratch. When a user tries to edit a content page, they are presented with a login box - the user can login using their username and password. The problem is - if they edit a node using a username, they are no longer redirected to the login page (as the user is already authenticated), so they are not presented with the login box. So, how can we get the login box to appear for us so that we can set the user's own user ID on the page being edited, rather than having to rely on the permissions table to determine who can edit which page? Thanks in advance, Triggy A: Wouldn't you simply put a "dummy" table with no ACL restrictions into the same section as your node table(s) where the node permissions are stored? See User Access Management for Drupal 6 - A Module-Based Approach for a more detailed explanation. It is available in the MediaWiki downloads section of my site.
