Physiological and genetic studies have shown that P-gp controls the absorption, distribution, and excretion of a number of drugs. It is involved in the multidrug resistance of cancer cells. P-gp is a member of the ATP-binding cassette (ABC) transporter family, which plays an important role in active transport of a wide range of substrates. Members of the ABC transporter family function as two membrane-spanning domains with nucleotide-binding domains at the cytoplasmic surface of the membrane. The membrane domains bind and hydrolyze ATP to drive the transport of substrates from the cytoplasm to the extracellular space or vice versa, whereas the cytoplasmic domains bind the drug substrate and induce conformational changes that allow the drug to enter or leave the cytoplasm. This review summarizes current information regarding the transmembrane structure, substrate specificity, and the molecular recognition of P-gp. The present invention relates generally to a novel valve and more specifically to an aircraft turbine engine valve which is in-line with the combustion and primary flow passage of the turbine engine. Heretofore, it has been known to utilize valves to control the direction of a particular flow of fluid therethrough.
