I would like to know if there is any easy way to backup the contents of an external Harddrive to my remote server, using rsync. I have the following requirements: The NAS harddrive should be mounted by the remote server It must be a rsync command, not ssh or telnet and some alternative. I have many similar devices on my network, all with similar configurations, so i wish to have a quick and easy solution, and not to have to go for a manual process. A: You can use sshfs to mount the share. Once the remote file system is mounted, you can use rsync to replicate the files to your local system. You probably need to run rsync as root since it can't access any of your user files. Q: javascript or jquery file loader I want a fast and easy to use solution to load pictures from my server. I found these two links below and was looking for some up-to-date solutions. I cant really find any other than this (which was very slow...) with the jquery solution. Link 1 - script.com Link 2 - js-image-loader.com I was looking at the second but the first was much quicker! So whats your take? Should I go for the jquery solution and change it to the first link or the second? It seems to be working ok. I would also like to be able to have the images expire after say 20 6d1f23a050
