To investigate the clinical and laboratory characteristics of Langerhans cell histiocytosis(LCH) in Han population and explore its clinical features. A total of 104 patients with LCH were enrolled in this study. Their clinical presentations and laboratory features were analyzed, including patient and clinical characteristics, laboratory features and complications of this disease. The incidence of male predominance was higher than that of female. The median age of onset in patients with LCH was 2 years. The most common clinical features of LCH included fever, lung involvement, and multifocal lesions. The laboratory features included high levels of lactate dehydrogenase and lactic acid, decreased levels of white blood cells and hemoglobin, and a high level of serum ferritin. In this study, pulmonary involvement was more common in children. The most common complication was pulmonary hypertension. More than half of patients had extensive lesions in the bone, soft tissues and multiple organs, and children was more likely to have thrombocytopenia than that in adults. LCH presents unique clinical and laboratory features in the Han population, especially in children. It was easy to misdiagnose this disease in children. Therefore, it is important to seek the specific clinicopathological features of LCH at the onset to increase the understanding of this disease in Han population and promote the timely diagnosis of LCH.June 06, 2016 That episode of all-staff sardines in the U.S. Senate race all but ended in Wisconsin with the death of Senator Ron Johnson in a single car accident in Virginia. It will be hard to fill the void. Scott Walker will be a year removed from being term-limited. If Walker was the second-most vulnerable Republican senator after Jeb Bush, like Cruz was in 2016, then senator Rand Paul would certainly be second-most vulnerable.
