In ischemia/reperfusion injury to the kidney, tubular epithelial cells (TEC) of the proximal tubule are critical to the pathogenesis of acute tubular injury and acute renal failure. An understanding of the cellular and molecular mechanisms involved in ischemic injury and repair should lead to the development of novel strategies to treat acute renal failure. Our data indicates that an early, transient increase in calcium ion (Ca2+) in the cytoplasm of TEC occurs during and after renal ischemia. Agents which bind to and decrease cytosolic Ca2+ attenuate ischemic injury in an in vitro model of TEC. The decrease in cytosolic Ca2+ is accompanied by an increase in cytoplasmic pH. The influx of Ca2+ during ischemia is an early event 6d1f23a050
